HO-1165, Treakle Farm
4797 ~~4979~~ Sheppard Lane, Ellicott City,
MD Tax Map: 29, Parcel: 25

The Treakle Farm is located at ~~4979~~ 4979 Sheppard lane. The earlier historic sites inventory of the Treakle Farm notes that it began as tenant farm #19 on Doughoregan Manor but suggests that James Treakle (1808-1881) and his wife Henrietta M. Treakle (1809-1880) were the tenants in 1860. James Treakle had served as a deputy sheriff for the area when it was still part of Anne Arundel County, later served as a Howard County Commissioner, and was a clerk for the Maryland House of Delegates.

There are several historic structures on the property, with the wagon shed and springhouse dating back to 1877.

Hay Barn

The Hay Barn is a one-story, three-bay by one-bay frame structure with most of the foundation hidden below the current grade and the little that is exposed has a new stone veneer. The exterior has new metal siding and new roll-up glazed metal doors in the center of the east and west walls, flanked by new windows. The gambrel roof has new v-crimp metal roofing and a ridge that runs north-south. The north gambrel end has a cantilevered hood for the hay track to pass outside. The interior has a concrete floor and horizontal boards lining the walls. It is built with a circular-sawn heavy-timber frame of Queen posts with up-braces. The Queen posts above the girt are offset to the outside of the posts below the girt. The upper posts support purlins at the break in the gambrel, with up-braces to the purlins. A shorter, non-historic gable-roofed addition is attached to the north end of the east elevation.

Wagon Shed

The wagon shed and corn crib is a one-story, three-bay by three-bay frame structure with a rubble stone foundation, metal siding, and a gable roof with an east-west ridge. It has the crib in the center with a shed to each side. It is built with a hewn heavy timber braced frame that is mortised and tenoned and pegged; the braces are sawn. The north and south walls each have four posts with girts running to the crib, and the two center girts of the south shed have two iron eyes through them to support a wood hoist, both of which are missing. The north shed has the east-center girt cut out but the west-center girt still has the wood hoist in place. The north plate has rotted away and been patched. The rafters are three-quarter round logs that are squared at the foot, and they support shingle lath. The crib has vertical slats fastened with cut nails. The west end of the crib is divided in half by a low wall of slats.

Granary

The granary is a one-story, one-bay by one-bay frame structure with four rubble stone piers that run north south for the whole depth of the building. The walls are covered with metal siding and the gable roof has v-crimp metal and an east-west ridge. The north elevation has a new door in the center. Both the east and west elevations have a new six-over-six sash on the first story and another in the gable end. The south elevation has a similar sash centered on the wall. The interior has been completely renovated leaving no clear evidence of the original function of the building, which is conjectured to be a granary.

Springhouse

The springhouse is located about 150 feet east of the house, just northwest of the Dairy Barn, is a one-story, four-bay by one-bay structure with the west bay of rubble stone and the three eastern bays of block. It has a hip roof with v-crimp metal. The south elevation has a new six-over-six sash in the west bay, a new door with six lights in the west-center bay, a new six-over-six sash in the east-center bay, and a new door with six lights in the east bay. The east elevation has a new six-over-six sash and the west elevation has no opening. There is a pit dug into the hillside at the west end with a rubble stone wall and a springhead with opening at the west end of the pit. There are new wood steps down into the pit. The north elevation has a new six-over-six sash in the west and west-center bays and no other openings. The east bay is deeper than the center and west bays.

The structure was built in three stages, from west to center to east. The west section has a concrete floor and trough at the west end and water still flows into it. The walls are parged. The east wall was completely taken down. The ceiling has hewn joists with lath nails and plaster burns. The original hip roof is still in situ. The rafters are sawn and two have a center tenon and peg at the ridge. They support alternating shingle lath and wider boards. The east end of the roof is captured within the addition and has circular-sawn wood shingles. Based on other nail holes, this was probably the second roof on the west section. The center section also has a hip roof, with the east end captured by the east addition. The joists and rafters are circular-sawn, with a ridge beam, and this is all re-used lumber. The sheathing boards are also re-used and there appears to be asphalt roll roofing. The eastern wall is partially in place and it appears it had a window that was converted to a door. The eastern section is built with dimensional lumber and probably dates to when the Dairy Barn was built.

Dairy Barn

The Dairy Barn is located about 5 feet southeast of the springhouse and is a two-story, 18-bay by three-bay structure with a block lower story and a gambrel-roofed upper story with a kick at the eaves and v-crimp metal roofing. The gambrel ends have metal siding. The west elevation has a new metal door in the north bay and new six-over-six sash in the remaining bays. The south elevation has a center door on rollers on the lower story, with a new door with nine lights to the west and a new six-over-six sash to the east. The upper story has paired doors on T hinges in the center with a small one-over-one sash to each side. There is a cantilevered hood for a hay track at the ridge. The east elevation has no opening in the north bay, there are five new six-over-six to the south, then four closed-off bays and seven bays with new sash. The south bay has a doorway that leads to a concrete silo with steel hoops and a metal dome roof. The north elevation of the barn has a center door on rollers on the lower story, with a new six-over-six sash to each side. The upper story has two small one-over-one sash. The lower story interior has had all the stanchions removed and new frame walls installed running north-south to create a long center aisle. There is some horizontal board sheathing on the walls and insulation and some plywood on the ceiling. The upper story is one open space with exposed 2 by 4 rafters that have a strut across the break in the roof and a short collar at the ridge that supports the hay track. The trolley and fork are still in place. There is a tongue-and-grooved wood floor.

There is a stone foundation east of the house that is purported to be an ice house and that is now covered by entirely new construction, rendering it to no longer have historic integrity. The other buildings on the farm are also not historic.

HO# 1177, Duvall Family Farm
2435 Duvall Road, Woodbine, MD
Tax Map: 13, Parcel: 107

The Duvall Family Farm is located at 2435 Duvall Road, about one mile northwest of Daisy. The historic house was demolished c. 2008-2010 but several historic farm buildings survive, including a smokehouse, wagon shed, hay barn and poultry house. The farm had been in the Talbert family in the late nineteenth century and was reduced from 187 acres to 138 when sold to Samuel and Beulah Davis in 1899. Nine years later they sold to Clinton Duvall who farmed here with his wife Mary until his death in the 1920s. Mary and her young son, John, then took over the farm and Mary left it to him at her death in 1941. John and his wife, Elizabeth, retained the farm until 1960. There were undoubtedly earlier buildings on the farm but these seem to have been replaced, with the existing structures mostly having concrete foundations and wire nails that strongly suggest that the Duvalls embarked on a campaign of farm improvements shortly after acquiring the property. The early twentieth century was one of several periods of intense modernization of farms in the history of central Maryland and the Duvall farm buildings seem to fit within this context. It remained a family farm with a diverse production during the Duvall ownership and the surviving buildings reflect that.
